

New scholarship initiatives

PAT WALSH, VICE-CHANCELLOR

This year there has been a further increase in the number and value of scholarships available to potential Victoria University students.

Victoria has a proud reputation for academic excellence in many subject areas. Scholarships on offer apply to any of our degree programmes—at postgraduate and undergraduate level. This is great news for those considering studying at Victoria.

Among the most sought-after scholarships for undergraduate students are Victoria's Excellence Scholarships and Equity Scholarships both valued at $4,500 for 2010. Some of these scholarships will be available for up to three years.

Excellence Scholarships are awarded to any applicant for a bachelor's degree who has received their NCEA level two certificate endorsed with Excellence although some conditions may apply. Applicants studying alternative qualifications such as the Cambridge International Examination or International Baccalaureate are assessed on a case-by-case basis. Students may apply for these scholarships at any time during the year prior to coming to Victoria.

Victoria Equity Scholarships are offered to students who are either educated at schools ranked between deciles one and three, can prove financial hardship, are of Māori or Pacific Island descent or have a disability.

Postgraduate students are highly valued at Victoria and providing scholarships opportunities for them is a priority too. There are scholarships on offer at all levels of postgraduate study including PhD scholarships valued at up to $80,000 over three years.

Victoria students also enjoy frequent success in gaining nationally contestable scholarships that support emerging researchers—such as Government funded scholarships and prestigious Rhodes, Woolf Fisher and William Georgetti Scholarships, to assist in funding their postgraduate study both in New Zealand and abroad.

Scholarship lightens load for new student

Thanks to a new scholarship at Victoria University, Holly Tunstall has cut down the hours she works at a café to focus more on her studies.

The 18-year-old former Wellington High School student is in her first year of a Bachelor of Commerce and Administration, and a Bachelor of Science at Victoria University.

She says that thanks to the Robert Bostock Scholarship, she now has to spend only five hours a week working as a barista.

"Being awarded the Robert Bostock Scholarship has made a huge financial difference to my life. It has helped pay for my course fees, so I've been able to focus more fully on my studies," says Holly.

This year, Holly embarked on papers in economics, geography, government law and Spanish culture/history, a workload she says is "manageable".

"It's been a bit of a steep learning curve but I'm managing to keep on top of the workload. I am planning to eventually work overseas using my commerce degree with a development focus, so having studies a range of papers from economics to geography to Spanish culture and history will be a plus."

A keen traveller, Holly is also hoping to take a trip at the end of the academic year, depending on how much she can save.

She says working in a Porirua café not only helps to bolster her travel fund, but also provides the opportunity to do something she enjoys.

"I really like my job, so I'm fortunate to be able to hold onto five hours a week. And working in the café is good break away from my studies."

Working only five hours per week also means she can continue her work as an IHC volunteer part time too.

Holly is one of five secondary students from the Wellington region to be awarded the inaugural scholarship, made possible by a $1 million bequest from Robert Bostock, a retired analyst from Island Bay who died in 2007.

The five scholarships are available to school leavers from five central Wellington colleges and provide a grant of $4,000 to each student annually. Students are nominated by their principal on the basis of their academic ability, as well as qualities such as character, leadership, community involvement and contributions to cultural and/or sporting activities.

The colleges are Wellington College, Wellington High School, Rongotai College, Wellington East Girls' College and Wellington Girls' College.

Studying super-sized volcanic eruptions

Aidan Allan's research into one of the world's most destructive volcanoes might establish a way to predict future eruptions that could devastate the country.

Working under the supervision of world-renowned scientists Professor Joel Baker and Professor Colin Wilson at Victoria University, Aidan's PhD degree will focus on the world's youngest "supereruption" Oruanui, which erupted from Lake Taupo about 27,000 years ago.

"Taupo is the ideal setting to study the dynamics of supereruptions—the area is host to the most prolific record of young supereruptions on Earth."

In April this year the 25-year-old was awarded a prestigious Top Achiever Doctoral Scholarship. This will fund him to undertake his PhD degree at Victoria over the next three years.

Administered by the Tertiary

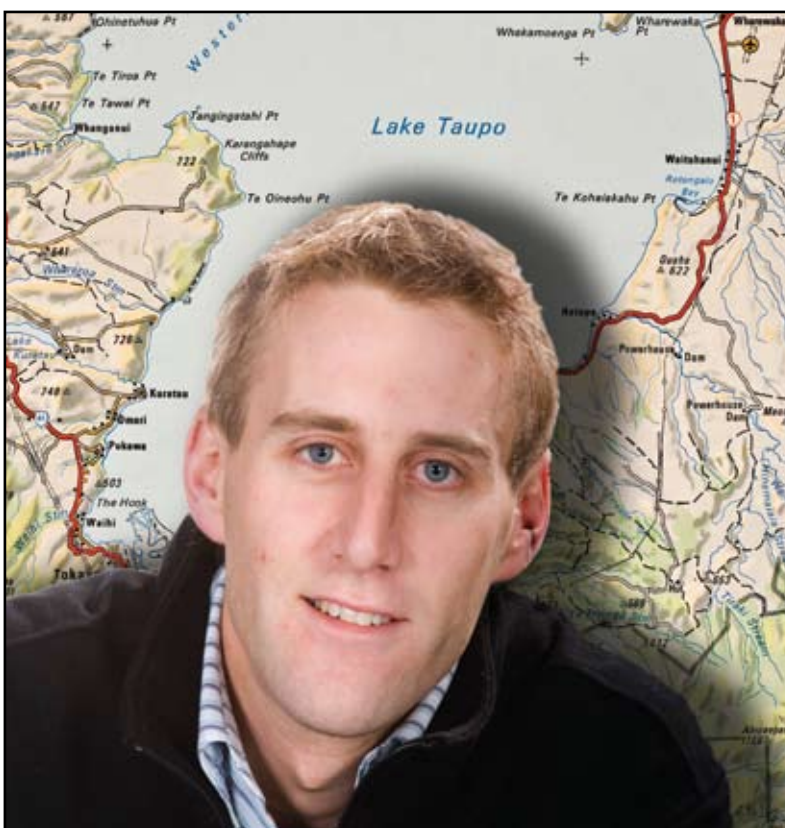

Education Commission, these scholarships are awarded to the top PhD candidates nationwide. Aidan is one of eight successful Victoria University students from the latest round.

He says a supervolcano is a volcano that has released enough material during a single eruptive episode to cover the entire North Island beneath a blanket of volcanic ash 10 metres thick.

"From a societal and economic standpoint, a supereruption like Oruanui would be devastating for New Zealand."

"I want to know what clues a volcano may provide that would tell us that it is building up to a supereruption. This is important for New Zealand—as yet we don't know how likely it is that there might be another supereruption in the central North Island."

Aidan will use a combination of traditional and novel geochemical techniques to find out how the Oruanui supereruption came to happen, how the magma was stored in the shallow crust, and what ultimately triggered its release in a colossal eruption.

"I hope to be able to establish the timescales involved in generating a supereruption—from the tens of thousands of years during which the magma bodies are assembled, to the weeks or days during which the final conditions for eruption are established."

Aidan also has a Bachelor of Science and a Master of Science from Victoria.

Uncovering Antarctic secrets

Twenty-four-year-old Evelien van de Ven is using sediments from deep under the Ross Sea to gain an insight into Antarctic history.

Using a drill core from the 1980s, the Victoria University Master of Science student has access to a record of sediments—like mud and sand—deposited up to 700 metres below the Ross Sea over the past 35 million years.

"These sediments include the mineral zircon, which I'll be analysing this year to find out more about the region's geological and/or climate history," she says.

"By investigating the nature of the zircon found in the drill core, I can find out what types of rocks were being eroded to make up these sediments, and I can find out where the zircon came from."

"I might be able to find out how old the rocks hidden beneath the ice are, discover more about where the Antarctic continent lay millions of years ago, or add to current climate research. Outcomes of this research have the potential to be really interesting and useful for other scientists." Miss van de Ven is one of the first recipients of the Dominion Post Research Master's Scholarships, each worth $15,000 plus tuition fees.

"I'm very lucky to have the support of the Dominion Post scholarship. It means I can focus on my studies without needing a part-time job."

"After my undergraduate studies I knew I wanted to carry on to postgraduate level—I didn't feel like I'd done enough learning. The more I learn, the more I want to know. This scholarship has made it that much easier."

She says she likes studying in Victoria's School of Geography, Environment and Earth Sciences because she has access to "top notch" facilities of an international standard, like the state-of-the-art geochemistry laboratory and Antarctic Research Centre.

She hopes to complete her thesis by early 2010, and is looking to do a PhD through the Antarctic Research Centre.

A strong tradition of Latin studies at Victoria

James McNamara, Woolf Fisher Scholarship recipient

The political manipulation of fear is as old as history itself.

Woolf Fisher scholarship recipient James McNamara intends to research its role in the politics of the Roman empire when his scholarship takes him to Trinity College in Cambridge this September.

One of only three Woolf Fisher recipients nationwide for 2009, he will be working towards a PhD in Classics at Cambridge, researching the historiography of the great Roman historian Tacitus, and focusing on Tacitus' representation of fear as a means of controlling the Roman Empire.

"Tacitus was a perceptive historian who was often critical of how the Roman empire was run," says James. "In one of his works, a barbarian general says that the Romans 'make a desert and they call it peace'. At a time when catchwords like 'terrorism' are so prominent in contemporary politics, Tacitus' comments on the manipulation of fear and language in the Roman empire are a fascinating point of comparison."

James' Master's research has included time in Germany where he investigated how Latin texts have been adapted for use in school textbooks, in different ways under different political regimes.

He says he has no doubt about the modern relevance of Classics.

"Latin texts continue to influence modern thinking because, besides the quality of the literature, Romans faced many of the same issues that we do today."

Professor of Classics John Davidson says: "James is an outstanding student of Latin and Roman history who has carried on the strong tradition of Latin studies in Wellington."

James, who has also been awarded the Rutherford Research Studentship by Trinity College, is looking forward to throwing himself into all aspects of Cambridge student life—academic, sporting and cultural. The Victoria University representative fencer and cricketer is also a keen musician, with a particular interest in traditional Celtic music.

School Leaver Scholarships for Academic Excellence 2008/2009

Over one hundred and eighty students enrolling at Victoria University for the first time in 2009 were recognised as top scholars and received these scholarships to assist them to commence their fulltime studies. These academically-able first year students are getting a start in their university career through a Victoria University of Wellington School Leaver Scholarship for Academic Excellence. We look forward to reading about their future successes as they progress in their studies.

Victoria University of Wellington Top Scholars 2008/2009

Congratulations – a scholarship or prize from Victoria University of Wellington is not lightly won. It represents commitment, hard work and talent – attributes these scholars have all demonstrated. In many cases, recognition of their achievements would not have been possible without the financial contributions of generous alumni and friends of Victoria. We congratulate you too, on your foresight and wisdom in establishing these awards that enable the students concentrate on their studies and eventually take their place on the world stage in a range of creative and intellectual endeavours.
